High quality public policy, including employment policy, relies upon knowledge gained through high quality research. That research must be thematically relevant, available in time, and based on up-to-date figures and rigorous scientific methods. Connecting research to the formation of public policy nevertheless demands a working institutional set-up that has not yet been established in the Czech Republic. As an example of good practice, we will give a detailed presentation of the German Federal Institute for Employment Research (Institut für Arbeitsmarkt- und Berufsforschung or IAB). In parallel seminars, examples of the IAB's research that have had a major impact on German public policy will be presented and a panel discussion will focus on the possible practical uses of the IAB's example in the Czech Republic.

The seminar is in English.
